Hi Paul

I spoke briefly to Jonathan about this at Conference. I mentioned the drawing is very different to the build-up of our system test and the design is such unsuitable for RS5000.

Ultimately we are not in a position to give compliance. All we can do is refer people to the details of our compliance guide and if required our copy of BR135 which details our system.

They should discuss with Building Control their design before ordering materials or work starts on site.

Those are my thoughts.

Would you like a set of words that gives that message in a friendly way?

Kind regards

Debbie,

I have just come off the phone with one of the Façade Engineers from Buro Happold.

She would like us to comment on the suitability of the use of RS5000 in the environment above 18m.

Please can you consider and get an answer back to me by the end of the week.

Kind regards,
Jonathan

Dear Jonathan,

It was a pleasure to talk to you over the phone.

Please find attached mark-up indicating the areas above 18 m where we are proposing to use Celotex FR5000. With the relevant sketched wall build up.

For clarity I am including the plan of the building.

EWS 009 and 008 form a goalpost supported off steel structure. The goal post as indicated in plan is clad with precast element onto the 4 sides.

The project is located in London

Please do not hesitate to contact me for any further clarification.

I am looking forward for your feedback

Kind regards
