Subject: Re: Urgent Grenfell Tower - Response to Press Article

Hi Peter,

Many thanks for your response. It is a pity that it came so late as I did request it within plenty of time for my deadline so as to get a full picture of the situation. I sent a statement request (see below) to Paul Dunkerton, your Development Project Manager at Kensington and Chelsea TMO eight days ago and had no response or indeed acknowledgement of receipt. Therefore I followed my procedure to ensure all parties had an equal representation but in regards to TMO for whatever reason this request got missed.

Had I had your statement before the story was published then of course it would have been included and the story changed.

It is perfectly common practice to use a historic picture of residents taken by one of our photographers for a current story about the same residents who are still fighting for improvements to their homes. In no part of the story do I suggest the residents were protesting over the power surges.

I will make the necessary changes to the story now I have received your comment as soon as is possible.

Many Thanks
Camilla

Hello Paul,

Could I please get a statement from you regarding a catalogue of problems reported by residents of Grenfell Tower which include power surges, heating a water defects and faulty lifts. Could you please clarify what is being done to rectify these ongoing problems and in what manner you will be compensating the residents who have lost household appliances as a result?

Many Thanks

Dear Editor,

Please find attached our response to your article 'Grenfell Tower residents at breaking point after power surges blow household appliances' published on 4 July, which gives an inaccurate account of recent events at Grenfell Tower.

I would also like to point out that the photo which was used with the article is not accurate either, the protesters shown in the picture are protesting over another issue and not about the power surges.

I would be grateful if you could please use the information provided in this letter and publish the accurate information.

Kind regards,
